Permissible Use(s): Federal legislation, the Driver's Privacy Protection Act (DPPA), Title 18, United States Code, §§2721-2725, provides that any personal information, as defined, contained in a motor vehicle record is confidential unless the information is requested and used for an identified "permissible use." An identified "permissible use" includes use by a government agency, including any court or law enforcement agency, in carrying out its functions.

Note: As a general rule, governmental functions are those which are essential to its existence, in the sense of serving the public at large, in the discharge of the government's obligation for the health, safety, or general welfare of the public generally, rather than those functions which are private, such as commercial solicitation. Commercial solicitation by a government entity does not involve either ministerial (absolute, certain, and imperative) or discretionary (one which requires exercise in judgment and choice and involves what is just and proper under the circumstances) acts when serving the public at large. If you have questions, consult your agency Legal Office.
